HARRY COVERDALE'S COURTSHIP

(Continued.) Why, the fact is, my dear fellow, returned Knighton, a well disposed goose who, when Harry first commenced his college career, had formed an enthusiastic attachment for him, in return for which he expected his friend to advise him how to act, and what to say, upon every occasion, trifling as well as important-a tax which even Harry's good-nature found somewhat oppressive, 'the fact is, I consider it quite providential, if I may say so, finding you here to night, -you know I always like to have your opinion before I make up my mind, there is nobody with such good sense as you, at least nobody that I've ever met with. My dear Coverdale, I'm going to take the most important step, that is, if you see no reason against it, that is, if you see no reason against it, which I can scarcely feel a doubt of; but I'll tell you the whole affair, beginning properly at the beginning. When I was down in Hampshire three years ago _____" hut we will not in-flict Mr. Knighton's amiable prolixity diet. Mr. Knighton's aminous profixity on the reader; suffice it to say, that having linked his arm within that of Coverdale, he paraded his victim up and down a certain gravel walk for the space of at least three-quarters of an hour; while he poured into his ears as dell a tale of true love as ever ran smooth; true love of the very mildest quality which was certain to end simply and naturally in a stupi marriage, about the whole of which affair there could not by possibility be two opinions. At length, when Harry had agreed with everything a d to everything at least twice over, and strengly advised his tormentor to act as he folt certain he would have done if his advice had been just the other way, (for this young men, although he eagerly sought counsel, by no means considered himself bound to walk thereby) it anddenly occurred to Mr. Knighten that he was doing an unkind thing by his friend, and a rude one by his host in not sooner joining the ladies; according at (literally) the eleventh hour, he exercised thus much self-denial, viz: having nothing more to say, he said it. When Coverdale entered the drawing-room, he east round his eyes to discover what might have become of Alice and Mr. Crane and failing to perceive them, was about to find some excuse for making his way into the bount it beyond, when Emily pounced upon him to entreat him to sing for the edification of some dear Mary Jane or other, who was dying to hear him, and the very identical Mary Jane her-elf seconding the request in a mild; insinuating, bleatparal roign and of energine hand d nothing for him but to consent, which he did with a very ill grace indeed. Having dashed through a tender and schtimental Italian love ditty in a ferocious, not to say sanguinary style, he declared he was so hourse that he could not sing another note, and again made an attempt to enter the boudoir, which he succeeded in reaching, just in time to see Alice quit the room with a beightened color, and in a manner which betokened hurry and agitation, while Mr. Crane remained gazing after her with a countenance indicative of the despest and most helpless bewilderment. From these symptoms, Harry rightly conjectured, that while he had been off duty, the cotton-spinner had popped; but whether his offer had been accepted or rejected, he was utterly unable to divine. Mr. Crane looked stupid and puzzle-pated, but he was sure to do so in any case. For the rest of the evening, Coverdale was in a fearful state of mind; people stayed late, and it seemed to him as it everybody had entered into a league to worry and torment him. First, the you g lady who had sat next him at dinner get at him again, and flirted at him so violently, that (his thoughts running entirely on marrying and giving in marriage) he became possessed of nervous oread lest she should be going to make him an offer-this idea gaining confirmation from its suddenly occurring to him that it was leapyear, he grew desperate, and pretending that Emily had made him promise to sing again, astonished that danisel, by crossing over to inform her that his hoarseness had entirely departed, and that he should have the greatest pleasure in favoring her friend with the song she had wished to hear, for which piece of inconsistency Emily bestowed upon him a glance so penetrating and satirical that he longed to box her pretty pert little cars for it. When the song was over, Knighton emerged from behind a very broad old lady, somebody's mother-in-law, very far gone in Curacoa, which she concealed beneath a pious zeal for clothing the natives of Bare-li-Aragon (an unknown island discovered by Juan de Unuzacruz in the sixteenth century, and forgotten over since) in the cast-off garments of the Blue-cost Schoolboys. The moment Knighton got clear of this philanthropic Amazon, he pounced upon Coverdale, and carrying him off to a reces, then and there related to him an unimercating episode iu his amatory care r. which

but which took nearly as long to communicate as the original history.

During this infliction, Harry's attention was occupied by observing the behavior of Mr. Crane, Almost as that "one side of a story, and till the other that the more side of a story is good till the other — niversity of Gottingen.

AN UNFAITHFUL HUSBAND FLYING PROM THE WRATH AND KNIFE OF HIS WIFE.—David Boyd, who has advanced into "the sere and yellow lead" of life, has for some time kept an unlicensed saloon in Troy, N. Her neighbor, Mrs. Johnson, had the advantage of her by twenty years in the virvantage of her by twenty years in the virtue of youthfulness, and was buxom to the eye of the vincindle David. She was in the habit of visiting the Boyts, and called once too often, while Mrs. Boyt was absent. Mrs. B. returned unexpectedly, and found the pair together. Sind immediately called in an officer, who took Mrs. Johnston off to jull, and Mrs. Boyd them and dressed herself to David with an oyster knife, and wounded him severely in the term. It was now his turn to bestir binself. knife, and wounded him severely in the arm. It was now his turn to bestir himself, and picking up all the loose change he had lying about, amounting to $633, he took sundry drinks at his own bur, and made tracks for the railroad depot. He bloody hand attracted the attention of the police, and by questioning him they soon ascertined that he was going to run away from his wife and family. They therefore arrested him, and the next morning he agreed to torgive his higherd wife, and return to his home and the sale of run. It is not our province to find fault with the decisions of a Court, but this particular one seems to be perfectly outrageous man incers another in the street, an entire stranger, going along peaccably about his own business, and without any provocation knocks him down, kicks him and teaves the marks of his brutality on his person, and for this is let off with a fine of five dollars. Medical Profession and the Family, possesses those intrinsic medicinal properties (Tonic and Diarctic) which belong to an Old and FURE GIN. The busi of manufacturing spurious gins, and offering them as beverages, under the titles, "Aromalic,"—"Cordial,"—"Medicated." etc., has become so common, that the public are justly suspicious of nearly everything that is offered under similar forms, and the trade has thus been brought into disrepute. It has remained for our house (established in 1778) to supply the pressing popular need, and to inaugurate a new era in the history of the Trade. We trust that our established reputation -- founded upon eighty years of experience - abundantly vindicates our claim to public confidence.
